Course Overview

The CPI instrument was developed more than 40 years ago as a dynamic and objective measure of personality and behaviour. Now in its third edition, the CPI instrument provides an accurate, complex portrait of a client's professional and personal styles. People trust this tool to help them find and develop successful employees, develop leaders, create efficient and productive organisations, and promote teamwork.

The CPI instrument presents detailed insights into personality when used in a comprehensive assessment programme. It describes a client as a close, knowledgeable, and objective friend would and is successfully used with adults to develop their work and personal lives.

The CPI 260 instrument takes the exceptional history, validity and reliability, and quality of the CPI instrument and transforms it into a leadership development tool for use in today's organisational settings. With updated language, scale names, and presentation of results, the CPI260 was designed with the training and development audience in mind. This instrument contains items carefully selected to identify an individual's strengths and areas for development, providing professionals with an effective measurement tool for their management or leadership development programmes.
